Xi'an-my hometown.

LAC project 2012

Yi Yang

The first time I came to Sweden last summer, I was so impressed by the method the Swedish used to collect and separate the household garbage. I've been to many countries before but I've never seen a similar method. In the home I stayed, the landlord separate the household garbage into 9 kinds. It's not only about the method itself, it's more about the awareness of people which is the result of many years of education. My project is to introduce the method of collect and separate garbage into my hometown-Xi'an-a city in the middle of China. This is the objective of the project.

Actions: There are three actions I can take to achieve the goal.

The first one is to make a leaflet about the method that everyone who gets the leaflet can follow the introduction and learn how to separate the garbage and spread it to local people.

The second one is to give lessons about the method to the students of the schools I was in to teach them how to separate the garbage.

The third one is to persuade the local government and communities to force people to start collecting and separating garbage since they did nothing about it at all.

There are two goals of the project. The first one is tell people collect and separate the garbage is important and teach them how to do that. The second one is let the local government know it is important and try to make them take action about it.
